Jeyaraj Kirushanth	13-Mar-06	Since May 2005, there have been several reports of large scale abduction of children in Batticaloa by paramilitary group. UNICEF sent several investigators and it issued a report in June that it has confirmed 30 such abductions. The names listed are only a sample cases that have come to the notice publicly. An Associated Press (AP) report of 4 October 2006, titled, "Government-condoned militia abducting hundreds on Sri Lanka's east coast", said the following. "A feared militia along Sri Lanka's volatile eastern coast has abducted hundreds of men and boys - some as young as 12. -with the government's consent, witnesses and officials said. Hundreds of Karuna fighters are terrorizing the district of Batticaloa, the scene of a rash of abductions that began in March, residents said. The total number of disappearances is unclear because so many go unreported, but officials from several aid organizations estimate at least 300 people have been taken by Karuna's men this year. "The communities seem to know who is taking their children and they live in fear and are in need of protection," said Marcel Smits, head of the aid group Nonviolent Peaceforce Sri Lanka.
